WONDER WHAT HAPPENED TO ME? Part Two, GETTING ZINES DONE

My semi-prozine takes slight precedence over my fanzines, so we spent the day running off and mailing the L.A.-area section of the subscriber list of New Libertarian Notes & Calendar. Reason for the panic-run? The two, shall we say time-dependent, advertisements, reproduced for your edification below. (Yes, all and sundry reading this very zine are invited and you need not be either a libertarian or even a fan to attend!)

We is John Strang and Kent Hastings, both of who work occasionally/regularly at The Agorist Institute and who pitch in for mailings of New Libertarian and its accompanying newsletter. John and Kent are both attending LASFS meetings with me (no, not dragged kicking and screaming,

Volume III · Number Two · March 26, 1987

John's a one-story-so-far pro and Kent's a long-time reader; I dragged Kent to his first SF con last fourth-of-July (guess which!) and he's been hot to attend more ever since.

Anyways, while waiting for the car to get back I whipped off this zine; no time to even type the comments on the last two back disties. So I'll begin April with comments — no ahem fooling.

We're supposed to pick up Sue Martin on our way into the Darkest Valley to LASFS; if so, this is the official historical record of her first attendance in several years. Sue's been single-handedly enlightening the LA Times about fandom, and even getting them to send her to Cons. A trufan, she throws parties and invites fen, not pros (well, they can come to; why discriminate? And on that note, see you next disty.

A dying assassin is given one last assignment and one last chance for survival. The job — to find God Almighty and destroy Him. The payment — eternal life. With the aid of a beautiful lady gambler, an ancient Hollywood witch, and a twelve-year-old telepathic hooker, Dell Ammo breaches the gates of Heaven and Hell to pull the Cosmic trigger.
